THE WAGES OF SIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD :-Thank you for the editorial about mawkish sentimentality over criminals. Every man is capable of wickedness, and many full, but there is no reason why he should not suffer the penalty. That is the order of nature and society in small things and

"One may suffer the tortures of the damned" in remorse for a peculiarly atrocious musder, but it does not recall the life destroyed. The wages of sin is death and the penalty of murder is death. It would be vindictive to put the murderer beyond mercy, but it is a mercy that should be left to a higher and a wiser arrherity.
